Equity Case No. _____

AFFIDAVIT OF LENORE WALKER, Ed.D.

1. I am a clinical psychologist licensed to practice psychology in Florida, New Jersey, and Colorado. I am currently a Professor at Nova Southeastern University College of Psychology in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, where I also serve as Coordinator of the Clinical Forensic Psychology Concentration. In my role as a Professor, I train and supervise doctoral students in psychology programs in the College of Psychology, including overseeing students' provision of psychotherapy services to women, men, adolescents, children, and families. Although I am no longer seeing my own patients on a regular basis, over the course of my career, I have treated or counseled over 2,000 victims of battering, rape, and incest.

2. I have a Doctorate in Psychology from Rutgers University and a Diplomate in Clinical Psychology and Family Psychology from the American Board of Professional Psychology. I have a national practice in clinical and forensic psychology, with particular expertise in violence against women, including rape and other forms of sexual violence, intimate partner violence, and family violence, including child abuse. I have provided expert testimony on these topics in civil and criminal cases throughout the United States. I have also been invited to testify before several committees of the United States Congress on national policy regarding violence against women and family violence, and am frequently asked to give presentations and lectures on these and related topics throughout the United States and internationally. My research on domestic violence was cited by the United States Supreme Court in Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pennsylvania v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833 (1992).

3. In 1978, I was funded by the National Institute of Mental Health to conduct a research study of 400 abused women. The study, which was completed in 1981 and is one of the most comprehensive studies that has ever been conducted of abused women, examined the psychology of abused women. (NIMH Grant no. R01MH30147, 1978-1981.) I collected information from the women interviewed about abuse patterns and communications patterns in dysfunctional families and the children in their families. The results of the study are discussed in my book, The Battered Woman Syndrome (Springer, New York, 1984), which has now been published in its fourth edition. My research on Battered Woman Syndrome continues at Nova Southeastern University. Some of my findings on victims of physical and sexual abuse are summarized below and I have drawn upon them in offering opinions and conclusions about how the Act will affect Iowa women.

4. Currently, I am a fellow of the American Psychological Association (APA), and serve on the APA Council of Representatives. I have previously served on the APA's Board of Directors and a number of APA committees and task forces. I am also a Board Member of the National Association for Practicing Professional Psychologists, and I serve on the editorial board for a number of major psychological journals, some published by the APA and some published independently. I have published 20 books and approximately 60 articles on violence against women, family violence, and related topics. A copy of my curriculum vitae, which summarizes my background, experience, publications, and research, is attached to this affidavit as Exhibit A.

5. I submit this affidavit in support of Petitioners' Motion for Temporary Injunctive Relief against enforcement of Section 1 of Iowa Senate File 471 (the "Act"). I understand that the Act requires Iowa women to make an additional trip to a health center to be given certain state-mandated information at least seventy-two hours before they can obtain an abortion. There are no exceptions from the Act's requirements for women who are the victims of abuse or sexual assault. This affidavit focuses on the Act's impact on women who have experienced domestic abuse and sexual assault. My opinions are based on my training, education, and clinical experience, the research I have conducted, and my knowledge and review of the professional literature.

6. In my professional opinion, and discussed in more detail below, the Act's requirement that women come to the health center, be given state-mandated information, and then wait at least seventy-two hours before coming back for an abortion will impose severe burdens on abused women and sexual assault victims who seek abortions in Iowa. By delaying battered women<sup>1</sup> or sexual assault victims in obtaining the care they need, subjecting them to additional emotional and psychological trauma, and increasing the risk of disclosure of their abortion to others, the Act will endanger the health and lives of Iowa women.

Background Information on Violence Against Women

7. Violence against women can take the form of physical violence with or without injury; stalking; sexual assault (including exploitation, trafficking, or stranger, partner, or acquaintance rape); and various forms of psychological abuse and maltreatment, with the goal of power and control of the woman by the partner. When the abuse is committed by a woman's current or former spouse, partner, or boyfriend, it is commonly referred to as intimate partner violence or domestic violence. There is significant overlap among these forms of abuse, as sexual assault can often include physical injury, and stalking can occur simultaneously with psychological abuse, to provide but two examples. In my research of 400 battered women, approximately one-half of the women interviewed said they had also experienced sexual abuse, mostly within their families.

8. One of the challenges of working in this field is the fact that there are no standardized definitions for these acts and behaviors. Another significant challenge stems from the fact that so many victims do not wish to reveal their own experiences, or will make intense efforts to conceal them, making it difficult to assess the prevalence of domestic violence and sexual assault. Terms such as “rape,” “incest,” “abuse,” and “violence” carry certain social and cultural stigmas, and the use of these labels can prevent women from disclosing their experiences. For example, many battered women I have interviewed and counseled are uncomfortable labeling an unwanted or coerced sexual encounter with their partner as “rape.” The same is often true for women who are sexually assaulted by an acquaintance or someone they are dating.

9. Although it can be difficult to measure the true prevalence of these acts of violence, because so many victims choose not to seek help from law enforcement or the justice system, the Center for Disease Control and Prevention (“CDC”) estimates that approximately one-third of all women in the United States have experienced rape, physical abuse, or stalking by a current or former intimate partner at some point in their lives.<sup>2</sup>

10. Recent statistics estimate that nearly one-fifth of all women in the United States have been raped at some point in their lives.<sup>3</sup> Over 80% of rapes are committed by someone known to the victim (i.e. an intimate partner, family member, or acquaintance), and the perpetrator is a current or former intimate partner in nearly two-thirds of rapes.<sup>4</sup> While women can be victims of violence regardless of age, ethnicity, or class, women who experience domestic violence, rape, and sexual assault are disproportionately low-income.<sup>5</sup>

11. According to the CDC's NISVS Report, 31.3% of Iowa women have experienced rape, physical violence, and/or stalking by an intimate partner at some point in their lifetime, which amounts to over 360,000 women.<sup>6</sup> Estimates of the number of women who become pregnant as a result of rape vary, with rates ranging from approximately 1.7% to approximately 5% of all rapes resulting in an unwanted pregnancy.<sup>7</sup>

12. Incest is a form of sexual assault committed by a family member or relative, other than a spouse, that involves multiple acts of sexual violation and exploitation over a period of time, ranging from several months to several years. Incest often begins when the victim is still a young child, and may go on for many years without the victim ever disclosing the abuse. Based on my work in this field, there is a strong correlation between acts of domestic violence committed by an abuser and acts of child abuse, including both physical abuse and incest.<sup>8</sup> Incest is vastly underreported in the United States; most victims of incest do not report the abuse because they fear their abuser may harm them physically, because they feel guilty about the abuse, and/or because they are afraid to disrupt the family unit.<sup>9</sup>

13. Similar to other victims of gender violence, sex trafficking victims suffer extreme exploitation through the use of physical abuse, threats, coercion, and other control tactics. Although it is quite difficult to estimate the prevalence of trafficking in the United States, the U.S. Department of State estimates between 14,500 and 17,500 individuals are trafficked in the United States each year.<sup>10</sup> Experiences with victims of trafficking has shown how reluctant they are to utilize established institutions and agencies in the community, including police. Sex trafficking, which is widespread in Iowa and not limited to the state's biggest cities, has received significant news coverage in the state in recent years.<sup>11</sup> A report was released last year by the Iowa Department of Human Rights, which recognized that improvements should be made in the state with respect to

14. Perpetrators of domestic violence subject their partners to various forms of violence—including physical, psychological, economic, and sexual abuse—in order to assert their control and dominance. Physical violence includes a range of behaviors from slapping, pushing, or shoving, to more severe acts such as beating, choking/strangulation, and use of a gun or knife. In addition, it is common for an abuser to threaten to use physical violence against the woman, or to physically harm her children or other family members, as a means of intimidation and control. Stalking by an intimate partner entails repeated acts of harassment, intimidation, and/or threats that cause the victim to fear for her safety. Psychological or emotional abuse includes verbal abuse intended to shame, insult, and humiliate the abused woman, as well as a range of coercive and manipulative behaviors, such as interfering with the battered woman's relationships with family and friends, and limiting her access to money. Sexual abuse by an intimate partner can include rape as well as other unwanted sexual contact. Based on my own research, I would estimate that nearly one in three battered women has been raped one or more times by her abuser.<sup>13</sup>

15. Many abusive relationships display a cycle of violence that can be broken down into three phases. The first phase is a period of tension building, during which the woman has some control over the frequency and severity of abusive incidents. She can slow them down by trying to give the man what he wants or speed them up by refusing to meet his demands. Eventually, attempts at control no longer succeed and the second phase, an acute battering incident, occurs. This is the shortest of the three phases but causes the most physical harm. Often, following this second phase is a period of contrition during which the abuser acts very loving toward the woman, frequently giving her gifts, apologizing, and promising to change. In some cases, the tension lessens or stops during this phase, which reinforces the woman's belief that the man will stop his violent behavior. This cycle contributes to the difficulty abused women face in trying to leave the abusive relationship.<sup>14</sup>

16. Reproductive coercion or control is a form of domestic violence involving coercive behavior related to reproductive health. For example, many batterers will forcibly impregnate women, or employ some other form of reproductive coercion, such as refusing to wear a condom or destroying or manipulating women's contraception, in order to further demonstrate the batterers' control and dominance. Indeed, compelling a woman to carry an unwanted pregnancy to term and give birth is a common form of abuse, and one that can keep the woman trapped in the abusive relationship. Having a child, or an additional child, with her abuser makes it even more difficult for a woman to escape.

17. It is estimated that between 4% and 8% of all pregnant women report that they have experienced physical abuse during pregnancy.<sup>15</sup> Studies suggest that women are at increased risk of physical abuse during pregnancy, including an increased risk of homicide.<sup>16</sup> A recent study comparing the long-term health effects of women who received abortions at or near the gestational age limit with women who were unable to obtain an abortion because they were beyond the gestational age limit found that physical violence decreased over time for the women who obtained an abortion, but not for women who were turned away and subsequently gave birth.<sup>17</sup> The researchers suggest that carrying an unwanted pregnancy to term may make it more difficult for abused women to leave the abusive relationship.<sup>18</sup> Women, especially low-income women, are afraid of leaving the relationship because of their inability to support themselves and their children, and to pay for basic necessities like food, housing, medical care, and clothing. The termination of the relationship can be an especially dangerous time for an abused woman.<sup>19</sup> And even if a woman separates from her abuser, he can use the children as a means of maintaining his power and control over the woman. Forced co-parenting, based on a court award of joint custody, can keep the woman in the same neighborhood and in continued danger from her abuser.

The Act's Impact on Victims of Violence and Sexual Assault

18. The Act's 72 hour mandatory delay and additional visit requirements will have devastating consequences for abused women and survivors of sexual assault. First, the Act's requirements will make it extremely difficult, if not impossible, for women in abusive relationships to have an abortion. Those women who are able to obtain an abortion may have to delay the second visit for longer than the mandatory 72 hours, as explained further below. These additional hurdles are amplified for women who are poor and lack the resources to make all of the necessary arrangements while avoiding detection by their abuser. Second, by forcing women in these horrific circumstances to wait at least an additional 72 hours before they can obtain an abortion, the Act subjects these women to additional emotional trauma, to the detriment of their health and well-being.

19. As I explain above, pregnancy is a time of extreme danger, and even lethality, for abused women, and abusers may use forced pregnancy as a way of keeping a partner under their control. Thus, it is often essential for many abused women to keep their pregnancy and/or intent to end the pregnancy a secret until after the abortion is obtained, and perhaps beyond that time as well. However, the Act will make it much harder for a woman to obtain an abortion without detection by an abusive partner. The Act can operate as a requirement that women notify their spouses of their decision to have an abortion, which would have devastating consequences for abused women and could also trigger violence from partners who were previously not violent.

20. It will be extremely difficult for some battered women to make an additional trip to the abortion clinic without detection. Battered and abused women are carefully monitored by their abusers, such that going to a doctor's office or clinic in secret, even for a single visit, may require significant planning. Abusers have many ways of closely monitoring every move of the women they abuse; for example, many women have told me that their partners regularly check the mileage on the car, and some abusers take more drastic measures such as removing the distributor cap of the car, or nailing doors and windows shut, in order to prevent battered women from leaving. An abuser may also call the woman multiple times at home and/or at work to ensure that he knows her whereabouts at all times. In addition, an abuser might show up unexpectedly at a woman's place of work to check up on her. In fact, battering at the worksite is not an uncommon event for victims of abuse. Abused women are expected to explain any absence from home or work. If an abusive partner suspects that a woman is leaving home or work during the day without his knowledge, he may become enraged and lash out with violence. Simply put, for some abused women, finding a way to get to an abortion provider for several hours for a single appointment may be extremely difficult. Finding a way to make an additional trip, especially within a close time period, may be impossible.

21. Abused women will have great difficulty obtaining the resources necessary to make the additional trip to an abortion provider. Abusive partners often maintain control and dominance by limiting women's access to money; even if an abused woman is employed, she may be forced to turn over her paycheck to the abuser. And even if an abused woman's insurance plan would cover all or part of the costs of the procedure, she may not want to submit a claim to insurance out of fear that her abuser will notice the claim. For the same reason, she may be unable to pay for the procedure with a credit card that can be traced back to her. Further complicating matters, a perpetrator of abuse will often cut off or monitor a woman's communications with her family and friends in order to weaken her support system, which means that an abused woman may not have others to turn to for financial assistance. For all these reasons, many abused women already struggle to pay for an abortion without detection. The Act will make this even harder, by increasing travel and childcare costs, and also potentially increasing clinic-related costs which must be passed down to the patient. And for those who manage to overcome this additional challenge, the process of saving more money is likely to further delay the abortion procedure.

22. In addition, women who are trying to conceal their pregnancy (not just their intent to seek an abortion) from their abusive partners must seek an abortion as soon as possible, before the pregnancy becomes visible. Indeed, one study of women presenting at an abortion clinic reported that 8% of women seeking an abortion had not disclosed their intentions to their partner because they feared physical harm if the abortion was discovered.<sup>20</sup> Due to the logistical and financial challenges of complying with the additional visit requirement, the Act will delay women in obtaining an abortion, thereby increasing the chances that the abuser will discover the pregnancy. If a woman's abuser discovers her plans to have an abortion, he may very well prevent her from doing so. Moreover, as I explained above, once a woman's pregnancy status is apparent, physical abuse by the batterer escalates; thus, the longer a woman is pregnant, the greater the threat to her health, and possibly even her life, from the abuse.

23. Even if an abused woman is able to make all of the arrangements for the additional required visit, in most cases she will not be able to travel twice within the span of 72 hours, both because of logistical difficulties and because of the intense monitoring and scrutiny that goes on in an abusive relationship. Thus, a woman will likely be delayed many days, or possibly even weeks beyond her initial appointment, due to the difficulties of coming up with the funds to make the required additional visit and making all of the necessary arrangements, all without alerting the abuser. Moreover, for a woman who must travel a significant distance in order to reach an abortion provider, it is exceedingly unlikely that she would be able to stay away from home overnight, for multiple nights, without raising the abuser's suspicions. Even if a woman manages to find a way to stay away for multiple nights, her partner may suspect that she had left him, which would greatly increase her risk of suffering physical violence.

24. Due to the nature of the abusive relationship, as described in paragraph 15 above, abused women may also be delayed depending on the point at which the pregnancy occurs in the course of the battering cycle. Abused women typically seek help when they are feeling strong; they generally avoid contact with others during crisis periods and try to hide their bruises after periods of acute violence. Thus, if an abused woman were to come for an appointment during a period of relative calm and then have to return another day, during the intervening period an acute battering episode might occur, keeping the woman from returning to the clinic for several days or possibly a week or more.

25. An abused minor seeking an abortion, who is subject to the 72 hour mandatory delay and additional trip requirement can also face devastating consequences, due to the resulting increased risk that her abusive parents will discover her sexual activity, pregnancy, and decision to have an abortion. A minor's sexual activity or pregnancy, which to an abusive parent may represent a child's independence from parental control, can be a triggering event for a parent who is emotionally abusive, physically violent, or who may not previously have been physically violent or emotionally abusive. A pregnancy that is the result of sexual abuse by the parent can be a significant threat to a family secret being exposed and a threat to the control a parent has over that minor. A minor's pregnancy by someone else may be a direct defiance of an abusive parents orders which can also be viewed as an attack on the control of the abusive parent. And disclosing an intention to have an abortion can also trigger abuse, if the abusive parent disagrees with this decision.

26. In addition to the physical harm caused by the Act, the mandatory delay and additional trip requirement will also inflict psychological harm on women who have already endured psychological trauma. Many rape and incest survivors are extremely distraught and may be suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder, anxiety, and/or depression. An unwanted pregnancy can be even more traumatizing for these women, as the pregnancy is a constant physical reminder of the sexual assault. It is extremely important for women in these situations to be able to begin to resume their normal lives and move on from the tragic situation. Thus, for a rape or incest survivor who wishes to terminate the resulting pregnancy, having the abortion is an important step in this recovery. For these women, the mandatory delay and additional trip requirements will prolong their psychological suffering.

27. Furthermore, the Act's requirements will make it more difficult for victims of sexual assault to obtain an abortion. The planning necessary to arrange an appointment, make the necessary travel arrangements, and come up with the funds to pay for the abortion may be difficult for women who are suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder or other psychological effects. Even though a rape or incest survivor may feel very strongly that she wishes to terminate the pregnancy, the obstacles to complying with the mandatory delay and the additional trip requirement, and raising the funds necessary to make the additional visit, may prove to be insurmountable. At the very least, the Act will likely delay sexual assault victims' ability to obtain an abortion for far more than 72 hours.

28. In addition, many victims of rape and incest are afraid of disclosing the incident to friends or family. Some fear the associated stigma; others fear being judged as somehow responsible. Forcing these women to make arrangements to be away from work, school, and family obligations on at least two separate occasions will increase the risk of discovery, and thereby jeopardize their privacy and confidentiality, and place them at risk of further emotional harm.

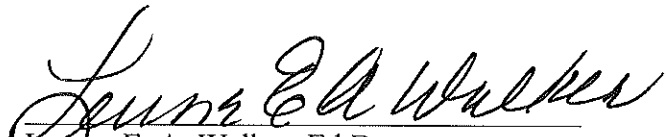

29. In sum, for victims of abuse and sexual assault, the Act will cause serious harms. For battered women, especially those living in poverty, the combined effects of the abuse and the lack of outside support or other resources may make it impossible to comply with state-mandated delay and additional visit requirements.

Conclusion

30. Abused women and victims of sexual assault who seek abortions, especially those who wish to keep their abortions private, must overcome enormous odds to obtain the care they need. It may be very difficult for them to come to a clinic once, and even more so for them to safely make multiple trips. In my opinion, if the Act is allowed to take effect, it will cause severe harm and have a devastating impact on abused women and sexual assault survivors, including victims of rape, incest, and sex trafficking.
